Engineering Ethics in a New(ish) World

This interactive session will consider ethical challenges and opportunities arising from the emerging technology of generative artificial intelligence (AI), and the age-old need to connect personally with the people with whom we work. The instructor will use real-world examples and draw on participants' experiences to discuss some of the benefits and ethical risks associated with using AI in various modes of engineering practice. Participants will also discuss the ethical implications of older technologies, asking whether, and how, we can still talk to one another with a workforce increasingly consumed by texting and messaging.
